

Did you know that...?

When a whale comes to the surface to breathe, it forcefully exhales warm air from its lungs. This creates the famous blow, or spout, that can be seen from a great distance.
Blue whales are mammals just like humans. They must regularly return to the surface to breathe air because they do not have gills like fish.