

Did you know that...?

Potatoes grow underground, so they must first be dug out during harvest.
A special potato digger attached to a tractor lifts the soil, separates the potatoes from the dirt, and leaves them on the surface of the field.
Farmers can then collect them by hand into baskets or crates.
Modern potato harvesters can not only dig up potatoes but also automatically transport them into a large storage hopper.

IQcoloring.com